U.S. Rescinds Order on Hiring of Minorities

By Frank C. Parter WASHINGTON, Jan. 16 (WP).— Tough new rules for minority hiring on all government contracts were abruptly pulled back yester day after the Labor Department discovered that its own solicitor had not passed on their legality or suitability.

The 28-page Order No. 4 of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance was revealed by Sen. Sam J. Ervin jr., D., N. C., who said that it made the controversial Philadelphia plan for minority biring on construction projects "look like small potatoes."

He accused the Labor Department of "dirty pool" for quietly circulating the order for neerly two months among its compliance personnel without any public announcement. At the same time, he said, the department was fighting an up dozens of newspaper-broadcast-unsuccessful Senate attempt to ing combinations across the counban the Philadelphia plan, claim- try. ing that all the plan required was "good-faith efforts."

Shortly after Sen. Ervin's protest, Leonard Bierman, senior compliance officer of OFCC, conceded that the order had been issued but said that no effort had been made to keep it secret. He said that the new rules were set up to strengthen the program because it was found that potential government contractors were not filing adequate 'affirmative action programs" for minority hiring under the old guidelines. asked if an oil she'd spotted for $250 in a Third Avenua gallery was a good buy, certain to rise in value, and was miffed when I asked whether she'd had the same doubts when she bought her last new dress.

It goes for all the people who have read financial columnist Sylvia Porter's recent series of articles called "Investing in Art," in which she asked the hypothetical questions: "What's behind the art boom? How you can buy into it-with the expectation of making significant profits when you resell?"

My answer normally would have been a fairly polite: "Forget it. Anybody who buys art as an investment has to be blind-literally blind." But now I'm too angry to answer at all. The fact is that nobody-but

Swedes Lend 'Devil's' Bible for U.S. Exhibit

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 16 (AP). -The famous 'Devil's' Biblethe world's longest hand-written manuscript—has been sent from Sweden to New York where it is to be exhibited at the Metro-politan Museum of Art from Feb. 14 through May 15.

The "Devil's" Bible, so called after the picture of the Devil on the cover, weighs 140 pounds and is more than three feet high. It was carried off by the Swedish Army in Prague in 1648 during the Thirty Years' War and since then has never been out of Sweden.

nobody-knows what will hap-pen to the price of individual all price of art will go up, of course, as inflation has raised the prices of everything. But nobody knows for sure which works they will be, how long it will take, or how long the prices will hold up.

Quality in Art

Quality itself has nothing to do with it, despite what one dealer told Miss Porter. What he suggested as quality I wouldn't hang on my walls. Nobody has ever agreed on exactly what quality in art is. If it were fixed, a critic could forget about ideas and just run around with a tape mea-sure. Manipulation, unpredictable changes in taste, chance, death and taxes are what affect the prices of art.

To buy a work of art because you're looking for it to rise in value is to marry someone only because of his or her stock portfolio; to have sex because you might have a child who might grow up to be a genius, or the President of the United States; to buy or build a house for your family only because its value may increase.

A good deal of art has and will rise in value fantastically, as have other kinds of property. But you can't hang a stock certificate on your walls knowing that each morning it will say something to you about color, shape and dreams in a lovely, impossible world of imagination and order.

Sure, some people seem to have had the legendary golden touch in their collecting. John Quinn, for instance. A New York corporation lawyer who died in 1924, Quinn bought for very little, in view of the extent of his purchases, works that include, among countless others no less valuable, two great Picasso oils now at the Museum of Modern Art, "Three

Less Than Paid

But when John Quinn's collection was sold after his death (he had given only one picture away, the Seurat to the Louyre). it brought about $100,000 less than the half-million he had paid for it. Today, figuring conservatively, experts say the collection would bring over $100,000,000.

But that's not the whole In his collection were many works by artists who are now completely forgotten. At up the Museum of Modern Art. Why, at that sale, did a Modigliant watercolor bring only $55, while one by the now forgotten Foujita brought $70?

Why did a picture by an artist called Paul Charlemagne bring $85, while a Picasso drawing went for $50? I look around my walls as I write. It would be dishonest for me to deny that I get satisfaction from the fact that in most instances I "guessed right"-vulgar phrase-and the market value of what I hope never to sell is still my best insurance policy. That's not why I bought anything—except

A Single Work

The single piece that has risen most spectacularly—at least 1,000 percent—is one I bought many years ago because I recognized the artist's greatness, realized this piece had to rise, acquired it for only that reason and now virtually never look at. For all its very real charge at all. It's the only work I'd part with and feel no sense of loss. Because most of the others are "family," part of my life, they're also the best part of the life of some gifted vibrant. very special human being I may or may not know. I'm grateful, as all art buyers should be, for being able to afford daily contact with that life in my own home. If I couldn't I'd find it in a gallery or museum.

I look each morning at a mysterious surrealist landscane. by a great man I needn't name, in which unidentifiable shapes (bones? the debris of dreams? fragments of fallen meteors?) are scattered around a cool blue, luminous void holding forever for me those strange, intense hours when the astronauts plunged through space. I look at a framed box in which differently sized. light-refract-ing lenses "floating" against a background of infinitely fine and intricate drawing refresh me each morning far more than would a swim, open-eyed, along the bottom of a tropical sea.

Both are by artists who have "made it," one a long worldfamous man, the other a young woman aiready winning international reputation.

Do I get more pleasure from their works than I do from a very large oil, all pale-gray and white, depicting—I think—a sea marsh under a brooding winter sky, bought one Sunday after-

The auctioneer, Jean Chaivet de Recy used an 18th-century print of the castle to illustrate the front page of the catalogue, taking pains to crop out the armorial shield of the family; the shield is so famous that it would have told Recy didn't explain how tile family planned to sell the property itself without disclosing the name.

Leaving identification problems aside, the castle is one of the finest structures in central France. It has 12th-century twin towers with machicolation and a drawbridge. CNDON, Jan. 16.—The first sale this year of any importance devoted to Continental ceramics is to take place at Sothe-y's on Jan. 27. Although not a spectacular collection, it has a nod cross-section from most of the important Continental actories, including Meissen, Höchst and Nymphenburg together rith some majelica, faignce and a series of Berlin and Castelli

The most important feature of the sale is an extremely rare and beautiful example of French maiolica made in Lyons about 560, painted in late Urbino istoriato style with the story of the Plague of Flies. It is not widely known that majolics was made in France, and in any case it is extremely difficult to identify. The style, treatment of subject and coloring closely resemble italian examples; furthermore, the lettering on the reverse is smally in Italian. The example in the sale, however, has a castron stiribution; there is a documentary piece signed and dated Lyon 1583° in the same hand in the British Museum which was old at Sotheby's in 1959. Also, both pieces are based on the same lesign, namely a woodcut from the "Illustrated Bible" published

It is eurious that in London, the Continental sales are often great deal more exciting and come up more frequently than inglish ceramic sales. This is probably due to the uncertain tate of the English ceramic market which is unpredictable and stratic, with prices remaining stagment or even falling in some leids, and rocketing up beyond all expectation in others.

Some German factories such as Frankenthal and Furstenburg ave been increasing noticeably in value, particularly with the early pleces, and Nymphenburg continues to be a magic name for which a steady demand has always been established. ONDON. Jan. 16.-As always. London is still full of surprises and good things. At the Archer Gallery, 23 Grafton Street, is a one-man show, running through Feb. 2, of recent oils by Andrew Vicari. Vicari. is a 36-year-old Welshman of Italian and Spanish ancestry. which makes a pretty formid-able artistic combination, training as he did both in England and in Italy.

He is a strange romantic talent, mingling the harlequin, the symbol of suffering, and puzzled · humanity sometimes with the cow punchers of the Camargue, sometimes with the watchers at Pentecost-'And I shall shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath, blood and fire, and vapors of smoke, the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood"-sometimes among the witnesses at the foot of the Cross.

There are some who say that this talent is old-hat, or oldfashloned, or déja-ru; but I am unable to agree with them. For at his best, Vicari is in the great Italian classical tradition, painting his fiery apocalyptic visions to last three or four or five centuries.

Under the auspices of the Arts Conneil of Great Britain, there is an exhibition at tha Victoria and Albert Museum of

Art : in London

120 of the best Japanese drawings and paintings from the Harari collection. The late Ralph Harari made a number of celebrated collections of Islamic metalwork, of .contemporary English and French painting of drawings by Aubrey Beardsley, Charles Keene and Gavarni.

His Jananese collection, formed around a nucleus of 26 works by Hokusai, was especially strong in work of the Tokugawa/Edo period, roughly speak-ing, the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries. The Orientalists Basil Gray and John Hiller have made the selection and compiled the catalogue, which fully covers the Kano, decorative, Muruyama, Shijo and Ukiyo-e schools, all of which are well represented in this impressive show.

Ann Madden is a young English painter married to the painter Louis le Brocquy and now living and working in the south of France. She is a ceaseless experimentalist; and an exhibition of recent work at the New Art Centre, 41 Sloane Street is of nine allk-screen prints (serigraphs) on perspex. I know just how long and hard has been the struggle to perfect the technique of printing on perspex; but Ann Madden has triumphantly disguised the struggle, and makes the whole thing look beautifully easy.

The work is of extreme ele one entitled "Silver and Black" and the one entitled "Poppy." This is hard-edged abstraction applied figuratively, which may sound confusing, but in effect is not. Her training as a classical painter, and her earlier experiments in sculpture in silver, have been utilized here to further her art. These prints are very impressive, and very indeed. recommended especially to young printmakers.

Andrzej Grabowski at the time of his tragic death last July, was preparing for a first exhibition of jewelry and sculpture. This project has now been enlarged to include a number of drawings, paintings and watercolors, the whole forming a memorial exhibition which has been mounted in his father's Grabowski Gallery, 84 Sloane Avenue.

It is always extremely difficult to predict from what is what may be, or in this case. what may have been. Certainly there was a clear concern throughout the work for the human condition and the place of man in the universe, which is as equally visible in the later non-figurative oils and sculptures as in the early portraits

Art in New York...

Transcendental Technique

By Peter Schjeldahl

NEW YORK (NYT). - Hans Holmann died almost four years ago at the age of 86, leaving behind a huge ocurre which included an astonishing succession of late masterpleces. s well as a nearly legendary reputation as a teacher and guru of young painters. General appreciation of his singular character and influence—an appreciation which began coming his way only very late in lifehas been growing rapidly ever since. Just how good the paintings of his last decade are is made abundantly clear by the selection included by Henry Geldsahler in the current "New York Painting and Sculpture" show at the Metropolitan, con-stituting one of that exhibition's really pleasant surprises.

And now the Emmerich Gallery has mounted a show of 12 unfamiliar canvases just releas-ed by the Hofmann estate, canvases spanning Holmann's career from 1940 to 1965, providing the occasion for a few new thoughts about this very special American master.

To U.S. in 1933

At a time when the age of 30 is widely equated with death, it seems salutary to note that Hofmann was 53 when he emigrated from Germany to Naw York in 1933. He had by then already established himself as an artist and art teacher of some note (after a brief career as an inventor), but he was atill a decade short of really hitting his stride as a painter. His capacity for sustained artistie growth would seem to have been matched only by the constancy of his personality.

It is perhaps equally remarkable that, while participating actively in the first truly American art movement of major pretensions he retained about his sensibility a distinctly "German" cast. He relished the heavy poetry of abstract themes like Nature and Joy, which may be symbolically read in the effulgent reds, greens and yellows he favored on his palette as well as, more literally, in his choice of titles:

If one thing distinguishes Holmann as a painter from his peers among the abstract expressionists, it might be his curious lack of a firm stylistic commitment, except to abstraction and painterliness in general and to certain , pet didactic principles. From Gorky through Stells, stylistic identity—the identity of what is painted has been a crucial and even an anguished preoccupation of American painting. Hofmann'e art displays almost a vacancy this department, the sense technique. He was a man who, above all else, simply loved to

An Anthology

Each of Holmann's canvases is typically an authology of oil painting techniques, its complex dynamic based on the unlikely contiguity of its component parts. Among his favorite procedures was impasto, the application of pure pigment with the palette knife, which he wielded lovingly, shoveling paint on with sensuous glee. But a painting full of knife strokes might also contain passages of flat brushing, squiggles straight from the tube, liquid wash and blank, sized canvas, giving rise to a powerful play of shifting in-tensities and illusive depths.

His best-known image, of which there is one fine ample at the Emmerich, "Au-tumn Chill and Sun," involves rectangles of smoothly impastoed color set against a freely brushed background, like pure chords sounding in the midst of a .cacophony. The breathtaking audacity of this image would seem to derive, however, more from its simple arbitrariness than from any pootic or formal statement it might be presumed to embedy. Indeed, it seems to exist for the express purpose of raising a host of formal problems that only the all-out application of the most masterful technique can

It is said that many of the students whom Hofmann infused with his peculiar brand of fervor at his Greenwich, Village and Provincetown ateliers later came to be disfliusioned with the master, perceiving too late that he had left them with an arsenal of means disguised as ends (it is interesting to note that many of his talented protegesincluding Lerry Rivers, Jane Freilicher and Neil Blains

Meaning of Technique

It seems likely that for Hofmann technique was an end rather than a means, in the sense that a differently exercised discipline can be spiritually libcrating for someone with a sufficient fund of character and imagination. In 1957, Hofmann closed his ly to painting, thus entering the last and possibly the richest decade of his life. The style of his late work is enormously varied and very grand, its spedal resonance perbaps suggest-ed by the little of one of the paintings at the Met. "In Sober Ecstasy." It is, moreover, avidly "experimental." Hofmann the octogenarian ranged from paint-ings in his familiar packed manner through bright, flat compositions to pictures that consisted of disphanous monochromatic washes. The sense of techniquo transcending itself, implicit in all his work, was brought to a peak of sublimity. Fueled by every sort of seeming paradox, Hofmann's genius was perhaps still growing in potency on the day he died.

Senators, Scientists and SALT

The shaping of American positions for the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT) with the Soviet Union has shown some alarming signs of excessive military influence and conservative Pentagon technical advice. But recently there have been encouraging indicauons that a countervailing force may be in the making in the Senate and in the President's Science Advisory Committee.

Dr. Lee DuBridge, the President's science adviser, has now for the first time entered the SALT debate within the administration. He is arguing that MIRV multiple warhead missiles, the main lever in the missile race, could be safely banned by an agreement to halt flight testing that would be monitored unilaterally. The Pentagon has been asserting that methods of inspection already rejected by both countries would be needed to avoid Soviet evasion.

At the same time, the White House now for the first time is consulting PSAC members about the central Pentagon argument for deploying American MIRV missiles. This argument le that MIRV is needed to penetrate low-performance Soviet anti-aircraft defenses which, the Pentagon asserts. Moscow could "upgrade" clandestinely into an effective anti-missile defense. Many scientists challenge this thesis, which has up to now been a strong influence on administration policy.

Meanwhile, the Senate Disarmament subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee, which spearheaded the fight against the Safeguard anti-ballistic missile (ABM) system last year, is showing revived interest in SALT. Its chairman, Sen, Gore of Tennessee, has summoned arms control director Gerard Smith to discuss the results of the Helsinki conference and policy preparations for the Vienna meeting April 16. Congress called in academic scientists to counter the Pentagon's technical arguments in the Safeguard fight and could well do the same to temper military influence in the SALT negotiations.

During the Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations, distinguished panels of PSAC members and academic scientists repeatedly were able to demonstrate that the risks emphasized by the Pentagon in opposing arms control proposals were of a dimension both Presidents were willing to entertain to achieve such agreements as the partial nnclear test ban. Under President Johnson, this function fell into disuse. And so iong as Mr. Nixon's science adviser, Dr. Du-Bridge, remained inactive in the arms control field, there was a clear field for the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Pentagon hierarchy to emphasize the military and technical dangers of arms control measures. When outside scientific advice was sought. it often came from Pentagon-selected "think tanks" and panels, which tended to support the military view.

The risks of accepting each one-sided data should have become evident to Mr. Nixon during the fight over the Safeguard ABM system. The program came within one vote of being defeated in the Senate partly because academic scientists were able to challenge the technical arguments on which the administration had based its case.

Nevertheless, over-reliance on Pentagon advice has continued until recently in the preparation of Nixon administration positions for the SALT talks. The result has been virtually to convince the White House been virtually to convince the White House so we must not make that mistake covering Europe—were being deploy-that there was no safe way to halt MIRV again." The same silly argument ed in great numbers. But no ICBM and, consequently, a new spiral in the arms is widely used in the Senate and

A vigorous attack on this thesis by senators and scientists could well play a critical role now in the policy review under way. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Unfinished Business

Defense Secretary Melvin Laird's announcement that the administration will urge elimination of student and occupational draft deferments was happy news for those who seek genuine fairness in the application of Selective Service laws, Sen. Edward Kennedy had already put his prestige behind such a move, and there is now reason to hope it will receive widespread bipartisan support when the new session of Congress convenes. The compromise worked out in order to pass the draft lottery bill last year guaranteed that the draft would receive a thorough review, and chairman John Stennis is on the record promising early hearings of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Student deferments have long been a focus for complaints about inequities in the draft: many educational authorities agree that they function as a sort of class distinction, guaranteeing that those who can afford higher education may delay, or perhaps avoid entirely, military service while others may not. Even under the new lottery system, which reduces the period of draft vulncrability to one year, some students are at an advantage because they may be able to enter or leave school in such a way as to be exposed to the draft for a shorter time than most. Even though President Johnson canceled an official list of draft-sheltered jobs in 1968, occupational deferments have also remained as an inequity; at the moment policies differ among the nation's several thoosand draft boards and a job that is deferable in Farbo may not have the same immunity in Hartford. Although congresstonal authority is required to end student deferments, the President already has the power to do away with the occupational category; but it is understandable that he should first seek sanction for this from the Congress, within the context of continuing draft reform.

It will not be easy for any congressman to vote in an election year for suspension of a privilege that profits his constituents with children in college. And there will be built-in resistance, especially in the House, from some people who oppose the long- that the Soviets ought to have range goal of a volunteer army and view about 150 ICBMs in operational further reform of this nature as a step in the wrong direction. German Relations

Walter Ulbricht has lately been at pains to kill any hopes that a dramatic reconciliation between West and East Germany was imminent. He wants nothing less than full recognition of East Germany and a renunclation by West Germany of its treatles with

It was, therefore, inevitable that Willy Brandt, the federal chancellor, should reject Ulbricht's draft treaty Wednesday when he made his state of the union epeech in the Bundestag. If relations between the two German states are now as bad as ever they have been (and it is East Germany which says so), then it is no fault of Brandt.

Brandt proposed Wednesday that there should be negotiations between the two goveramenis on the relations between the two states. If Ulbricht has his way, there will be no such negotiations—he wants the form, recognition, not the substance, good neighborilness.

Back to Earth

The average American, while still fond of the "New Frontier" mytb, cannot refrain from dreaming of a society in which his daily problems would be less neglected. For reasons that had more to do with politics than with science, the space conquest has overshadowed everything else for some time. The time appears to have come when it has to take a back seat to the benefit of other objectives.

The hour of a difficult choice is thus coming for the European countries. Two courses are open to them: either pursue their own effort, as they have done in the past without having their sacrifices rewarded by success, or respond to the offer to join forces with the New World. It seems as of now abvious that, even if the United States shows a lesser interest in the conquest of space and generally for all that has to do with science, any solution that would merely consist of repeating the fotile efforts already made would not have more chances than in the past of producing a result.

PARIS-The most characteristic feature of the crisis through which France is passing is the complete indifference of the public, which contrests strikingly with the effervescence in the political world. The sitting of the Chamber lasted only 35 minutes and was occupied by the reading of President Casimir-Pérjer's letter of resignation. The Chamber gave the letter an icy reception. The Senate was more violent. The new President is elected today.

PARIS-The League of Nations held its first meeting yesterday. American participation in this first meeting of the Council of the League of Nations, held in the clock room of the French Foreign Office, Quai d'Orsay, was conspicoous by its absence. Neither Ambassador Hugh C. Wallace nor any other member of the American diplomatic staff in Paris attended the session. Several speakers praised President Wilson's part in forming the League.

The Missile-Gap Ghost

By Joseph Alsop

WASHINGTON.-Inside and outside the government, the ghost of the "missile gap" is haunting the argument about American ABM deployment. Since this is a all, there were the U-2 overflights adly dangerous business, it may be well to lay the ghert.

The way the ghost works, particularly in the intelligence com-munity, is to make people say: "We in the press.

It is a silly argument because there could have been a missile gap, and if the Soviets had made the right decision, there would have been a missile gap. In the Kremlin, in fact, one suspects that they are now saying: "We were wrong not to pay for creating a missile gap; so we must not make that mistake again."

The story, in which this reporter was marginally involved, began with the first tests of the first Soviet ICBM. This first ICBM was a horribly cumbersome, expensive piece of machinery; but in the judgment of a substantial majority of the U.S. government's technical experts, it was quit good enough to carry a huge thermonuclear warhead to targets in the United

Initial Forecasts

The question, therefore, pre-sented itself: How many of these ICBMs would the Soviets produce and how soon would they produce them? The answer was reached by calculations of Soviet manufacturing capability. Crudely, it was readiness by the winter of 1961.

Initially, this forecast was generally accepted in the Eisenhower administration. For example, Sectestified under oath that there was indeed a missile gap, and he ad-mitted the gap could become seri-ous in the future.

Subsequently, doubts arose in the

there was no danger. But there was also an increasing question abor" certain technical aspects of the first Soviet ICBMs; and above of the Soviet Union.

The U-2 flights brought back no photographs indicating deployment of Soviet ICBMs. There was ample evidence that MRBMs—medium were wrong about the missile gap, range ballistic missiles capable of was spotted, in fact, because the Soviets had decided that it would be enough to "have Europe in pawn," as Nikita Khrushchev later put it. They had, therefore, deferred their ICBM program.

This last fact was quite unknown in Washington, however. In addition, the viewing range of the U-2 was relatively tiny; so that there were still many millions of square miles in which, in theory at least, the Soviets might be secretly emplacing IOBMs. Hence the Air Force intelligence staff and a good many of the CIA's civilian analysts continued to insist that the missile gap had to be taken very seriously

These people were believed by this reporter, as they were believed by President Kennedy. They carried conviction, primarily, because it seemed so idiotic of the Soviets not to exploit to the utmost their initial lead in very long-range mis-siles. This was no laughing matter, either, since the predicted 150 Soviet ICBMs would then have been enough to take out almost all America's strategic striking force.

answer, once before quoted in this space, is worth repeating. It was: "I hope I'd have done my duty. But it's a thing I don't want to talk about, because it's a thing I don't even let myself think about."

As anyone can see from the foregoing, a fearful gamble was taken in this matter of the predicted missile gap. With all the experience of many hard months (1 the presidency, John P. Kennedy literally felt that if the gamble had gone wrong, the consequence would have been unthinkable.

He is sure he could get a job as a bookkeeper if he went to a com-mercial class for a year; but tuition would be 1,000 shillings ($140), more than the per capita annual income in Kenya. His family has already put him through school and supported him in a shack in Nairobi for two years, and it cannot afford more.

The government says that he and others like him should go back to the shamba, the family farm. But his family did not have him educated for that, and he is used to city life. Besides, the shamba is only four acres, too small to divide and support more families, and he is not the oldest son.

The situation of Arthur Ichoya gives a glimpse of what may be, when one looks past the political sorrows of today, the gravest fu-ture social problem in black Africa: the swift growth, among a people who have been deeply attached to the land, of a landless, underem-ployed proletariat. The phrase is Arnold Beichman'e; many economists looking at Africa have the same concern. We think of sub-Sahara Africa as a place of endless land, where food grows for the taking. In fact, soil good enough for intensive farming occurs only in limited subsistence crop of corn or cassava. Renault Workers Indifferent To Becoming Stockholders

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

PARIS, Jan. 16 (NYT).—In an experiment to bridge the gap between labor and capital in France, President Georges Pompidou wants to give newly created shares of stock to the workers of the big state-owned Renault auto works. But the workers themselves are indifferent, if not downright opposed, to the idea.

As the shift changes at the grimy Boulogne-Billancourt plant on the outskirts of Faris, some of the workers gather along the zinc-topped bars on Bir-Hakeim Square. To someone reared on "stockholders demo-cracy," what they have to say may seem surprising.

The shares will be worth money, and workers will not have to pay a sou for them, but the standard reaction is: "Why don't they give us the money instead?"

"We don't want to become stockholders," says a husky pipe-smoker who works on a milling machine and has been with the company for 13 years.

Unequal Equality "It will divide the workers and create jealousies," 2 lathe worker grumbles, drinking Alsace beer. He has been with Renault for 17 years, and what he finds particularly upsetting is that the shares will not be distributed equally. They will be handed out on the basis of job responsibility and length of service with the company. As he commented: "Some workers will be more equal than others." A Moroccan worker who has been with the company 11 years speaks of his total indifference, as does a countryman with only two years of service.

Not one man concedes the possibility that he might identify more closely with the company as a result of owning shares. Instead, there is suspicion over the motives of the government Demands Stand Jacques Colimard, the 27-year-old secretary of the Bou-logne-Biliancourt chapter of the General Confederation of Labor, contends that "the best way to satisfy the workers is to meet the demands that have been in suspense for a time." Mr. Colimard, whose union is militant, Communist-led, and represents the largest group of workers at the plant, insists that the government is trying to "trick the workers so that they will ease up in the battle for better working conditions."

The major demand is reduction in the work week from 46 to 40 hours, with the same pay.

The average hourly pay works out to $218 a month.

Nevertheless, after attacking the plan, the young union leader concedes that the shares would have a value and that "even though it is the money of the capitalists, it is always welcome."

How to start benefiting from investment management with as little as $5,000

If you have saved or acquired $5,000 to $50,000 in cash or securities, you naturally want to make your capital grow. But you may actually be losing ground due to inflation and taxes, or perhaps to a lack of time for investment decisions.

To help solve this problem, clients in 55 countries have turned to The Danforth Associates Investment Management Plan, a unique program developed by a Boston family to manage its own common stock investments.

The plan thus far has proved especially efficient in providing continuing capital growth supervision for individual accounts starting with from $5,000 to $50,000, though, as in any selection of investments, losses do and will occur. For a complimentary copy of a 42-page report describing

REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT IN THE U.S.

A NEW CONCEPT

A well-established real estate principal, syndicator and manager (staff of 200 at present managing over $100,000,000) wishes to include European investors in the syndication of an income producing property in the U.S. which he has recently purchased. The return on this investment is better than twenty percent per annum in cash and mortgage amortization, shielded from tax in the U.S. This does not include any factor for appreciation in the property which is likely to be substantial. Part of this syndicate has already been placed in the U.S. and lists for the remaining subscriptions will be closed January 30, 1970.

Minimum investment units are $50,000. For details please contact: Box D 1,632, Herald Tribune, Paris.

CHARLES WILLSON PEALE

By Charles Coleman Sellers, Illustrated, New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 510 pp. $20.

Reviewed by James R. Mellow

Peale-Charles Willson Peale, to distinguish him amidst that early American dynasty of painting Peales—is one of those artists so locked into history that it hardly seems relevant to discuss him in purely artistic terms. That, certainly, is the tack that his biographer, Charles Coleman Sellers, a Peale descendant and author of an earlier two-volume biography of the subject, has taken in his present study.

It is a long book, providing not only a thorough and detailed account of Peale's life and lively artistic adventures, but encompassing a whole age in American life—the American Revolution (in which Peale served as a resourceful lieutenant), the establishment of the American government the was a disappointed office-seeker for the post of Postmester General in Washington's administration), the growth of American commerce and industry (both of which engaged him in ac-tivities as varied as itinerant portrait painter and textile-mill owner)—and a broad range of national figures, including the American Presidents from Washington to Monroe, most of whom sat for Peale. Their likenesses were enshrined in the portrait gallery of eminent men that formed part of the project closest to his heart, the Peale Museum in Philadelphia. Mr. Seller's book, although long, is as long and eventful as Peale's long and eventful life requires. Peale was born in 1741 and died, reluctantly, at the age of 86. Until the very end he was full of expectations and plans for the future; in search of a fourth wife the had aiready buried three loving women), hoping for the nationalization of his museum as a public institution.

As a writer, Sellers has several virtues; a fine, old-fashioned, leisurely style, a wonderful sense of the social life of the period, and a gift for incisive character vignettes that provides the reader with a gallery of crisp portraits, ranging from the thoroughly punctual George Washington through each of Peale's wives and prospective

In essence, Seller's book is a biography of the irrepressible Peale clan: sons, daughters, grandchildren, inlaws and close friends. It is full to the brim with births, marriages, great national events, business successes and failures, illne marvelous recoveries and, in the nature of things, deaths. Since the Peales were an incurably busy and gregarious lot, with fingers in every pie, they have provided the material for one of the liveliest histories of early American society that I have yet had the pleasure of reading. Like one of Peale's group portraits, the book brings its subject marvelously to life. Peale was, indeed, an exemplary if not a great painter. In any collection of early American art, his paintings are among the first to catch one's eye with their freshness and clarity. But equally often, it turns out to be a picture by one of his sons—Rembrandt, Raphaelle, Titian, Rubens - The names Peale sought out in "Gentleman's and Con seurs' Dictionary of Paints

The entire family, daught and nieces alike, took to pa-ing with remarkable profices And when one of them man fuly engaged Washington to for a portrait, a host of Peels including brother James miniaturist—arrived to take vantage of the opportunity the profit to be had from then-brisk trade in Washing memorabilia.

Peale was a man of me talents. He was a skilled turalist and taxidermist and time poet, a perennial inv who devised a portable ste bath and a patented wo bridge, a part-time farmer developed a milk wagon w nonspill milk tub derived the principles of the man compass, an occasional de and doctor (with his unorthe remedies, he managed to family and friends the several sieges of the dre yellow fever; his prescription a cold was a fast run with mouth agape). No Fur Farm Fun

WASHINGTON - The maxi fur coat has put a terrible strain on all our furry animals. Everything from mink to raccoon is in tremendous demand and it is impossible to fulfill all the orders. I didn't realize how serlous it was until . I visited a fur farm in upstate York. I talked to a male mink papred Emba, . who seemed to be very tired.

"It's been agony," he sald, wiping the perspiration away from bis forehead. "The farm is on a full 24-hour shift but we still can't meet the demand. Stand in front of me so the farm owner doesn't see I'm resting."

Emba said: "It was bad enough when they introduced the maxi fur coat for women, but what really did it to us was when they started pushing maxi fur coats for men. There's just so much a mink can supply." I believe I detected a teardrop in his eye. This used to be a wonderful farm." he said. "We worked hard in the summertime to supply the pelts for fall and winter, and then we could take it easy You know, play and roll around and rub noses, the stuff minks like to do. But then the furriers went crazy. They got into s fur-price war. They started dving furs in crazy colors; they

"The driving force behind every fur farm now is fear," Emba said. "It isn't just us," he continued. "Look at those rabbits over there. Would you believa at one time those rabbits were happy at their work?" "They seem so listless and haggard," I said. "When a rabbit doesn't want to be a rabbit, then you know the fur craze has gotten out of hand," Emba said.

"Are those beavers over there?" "They used to be eager beavers, but even beavers have a breaking point. They're so tired reproducing other beavers they don't bother to build dams anymore. You see that male beaver walking on all fours? Would you believe he's only one year old?

"This place certainly is depressing," I said. "I don't know how much longer I'm going to last," Emba said. "I've fathered 134 mink babies, but it's getting to me, "My back isn't what it used to be, and I have pains in my shoulders and I don't sleep well anymore.

"If you would just send out the word that even minks have their limits, you would be doing everyone here a favor. It may be too late for me, but perhaps my sons and their sons would be spared what I've had to go through since the maxi fur coat became the fashion of the year."

"My only hope is that we

March of Dimes."

Sam Brown, organizer Vietnam Moratorium Committee.

PARIS Ever since it was discovered some months ago, Middle America has been synonymous with old-time conservatism—quite unreasonably, according to Sam Brown, organizer of the Oct. 15 moratorium and full-time co-coordinator of the Washington-based Vietnam Moratorium Committee. "A part of Middle America' could be ours and will be." Mr. Brown says. The next moratorium is scheduled for on or about April 15, a very important day for Middle America. Mr. Brown points out: "When those income tax returns are filed, people will start think-ing about more than half their taxes going to current military expenditures. That has impact.

Samuel Winfred Brown jr., from Council Bluffs, Iowa, is 26 years old, slight and winning, with a drooping mustache and the dreamy look of a faded photograph. As a result of his work on the moratorium and as youth coordinator of Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy's presidential campaign, he has been hailed as an organizing genius, even in Washington, where self-acclaimed organizing geniuses abound. He was in Paris with Martin Peretz, a jaunty Harvard professor of social science and early moratorium

Viet Cong Talks

Peretz and Brown had flown from New York to join Sen. McCarthy for his talks with Viet Cong and Vietnamese delegates to the Paris peace conference. They attended the talks with Sen. McCarthyand have sworn not to discuss them. In fact, it was they who organized the talks from New York, with Sen. McCarthy's assent. "It was very simple," Mr. Peretz

While there is a natural tendency to consider Mr. Brown a McCarthy man, he careful to explain that he and the Moratorium Committee have no political commitments. Had McCarthy been elected. Sam Brown would have felt it his duty to lead a loyal opposition party. There is a certain obligation to keep government bonest," he says.

Sam Brown, who went from graduate atudies in government to study ethics at the Harvard Divinity School, gave up Harvard to organize the dump-Johnson movement in the summer of 1967. He and his followers made a list of possible presidential candidates, on which Sen. McCarthy was about 12th. "We didn't care then and we don't care much now,"

Mr. Brown says. "What we wanted was an anti-war president."

Mr. Brown became aware of the polit-ical potentialities of the youth movement in 1963-64, when young whites went to the South as civil rights workers. He is not interested in playing on the gen-eration gap, but in uniting factions. "The fact that the unions have endorsed us is important because the unions and the young have never been close. I'm not saying that's the great political alliance of the future, but it's important." Sam Brown refers to the Moratorium Committee as a "facilitating organization." There is no membership, and a count of sympathizers, Mr. Brown says, bas not been made. The purpose of a moratorium is educational. "That's what it's all about," he says.

Means of action include endless lists—

"lists are the guts of organizing." Mr. Brown has said-door-to-door visits, personal contact. On Oct. 15 he and his group succeeded in creating an event memorable in U.S. history for the depth, breadth and sincerity of response. Even communities that the Moratorium Committee had not contacted joined in. The Nov. 15 moratorium, hampered by the "New Mobe" group's prickly participation, set the Moratorium Committee's work back by several months. They are against organized marches and thought the march on Washington foolish and potentially dangerous.

"What do you do when you've brought 400,000 people to Washington, especially when you tell yourself it was a million and a half?" Dr. Peretz commented. The danger is that marches accomplish nothing and the marchers become distilusioned and cross. "The next step is plastic bombs," Sam Brown says.

Leftist Clashes

He has had clashes with extremists: people who wanted to disrupt Christmas shopping in the cause of peace, a far-left girl who proposed the motto, "Im-perialism Is the Last Form of Capitalism"-"Come on now," was Mr. Brown's Is the left-wing extremist a problem to the Moratorium Committee? said Sam Brown.

"Yes," said Martin Peretz. "The problem is Sam doesn't know it."

"You're like Mrs. Mitchell." Sam Brown said. "You see Communists under every bed." What will happen to the moratorium in the event of peace? "You can't expect a constituency formed on one issue to stay together." says Sam Brown.

"My only hope is we won't become another March of Dimes, which after polio is cured goes on to cystic fibrosis or something. Possibly the constituency can do something else that's interesting and effective and attractive, but it won't just be one direction-people will go different WAYS.

Sam Brown's own plan is to remain an organizer rather than a leader. He laughs at reports of his political ambitions. Political ambitions, that's the worst thing you can say in America todaywhich is a pretty tragic commentary."

"Before Oct. 15, he wouldn't have used a phrase like 'tragic commentary,' " Martin Peretz pointed out. Sam Brown, embarrassed by himself, agreed.
